Exploring the concept of mystification as a literary form which seeks to enlighten through deceptionBy Midwest Book ReviewLEARNING FROM LYING: PARADOXES OF THE LITERARY MYSTIFICATION will appeal to college-level students of language and literature, exploring the concept of mystification as a literary form which seeks to enlighten through deception. From mystification's creation during the century of Enlightenment to its changing forms and distinctive style and use, chapters pair readings of works by major mystification authors to explore how it works. College-level students will find this complex, detailed and packed with

Writers who mystify operate through paradox. Since the eighteenth century, when the term was coined in French, the cycle of temporarily taking in a reader by means of a deceptive text, then deliberately uncovering the fake, has enacted a drama of Enlightenment. Obfuscation reveals trickery, in an exercise that simultaneously embodies the ideals of Enlightenment and interrogates their limits. In "Learning from Lying," the lens of mystification reveals a singular literary history. Analyses of works by Diderot, Merimee, and Hildesheimer follow out the cosmopolitan roots of the genre in the "Republic of Letters" and show how it theorizes literature through practical experiment. For textual imitation revealed lays bare the necessary collusion between reader and writer that allows literature to exist as such.

By clearly situating mystification on the continuum that ranges from fiction to forgery, "Learning from Lying" provides a timely intervention in current debates about the study of fakes. This book is thoroughly illustrated. Julia Abramson is Assistant Professor of French at the University of Oklahoma.
